The military successes of European imperialism are easy to explain; in many cases they were a matter of firearms against spears. But as Alfred W. Crosby maintains in this highly original and fascinating book, the Europeans' displacement and replacement of the native peoples in the temperate zones was more a matter of biology than of military conquest.

the waves (133). The author relies on environmental, ecological, biological, and geographical forces to capture the limitations of Neo-Europeans. Chapter-long discussions of weeds, illnesses, and animals then allow the reader to see such often over-looked historical actors at play within different circumstances and environments.

different biological provinces or subregions. After all, Nero threw Christians to the lions, not to the cougars. As for the other Neo-Europes, there is no doubt about their deserving biogeographical categories separate from that of Europe. All three, for instance, have large - some of them man-sized - flightless birds.

Alfred Crosby, Pangaea Revisited, from Ecological

Ecological imperialism is the theory advanced first by Alfred Crosby that European settlers were successful in colonization of other regions because of their accidental or deliberate introduction of animals, plants, and disease leading to major shifts in the ecology of the colonized areas and to population collapses in the endemic peoples.
